Introduction

This assessment activity requires you to analyze a contemporary ethical issue.

You will write a magazine feature for a general interest magazine that analyzes your chosen ethical issue in relation to well-being.

You will be assessed on how critically and coherently your magazine feature examines:

- The differing perspectives on your issue
- The implications of current practice relating to the issue on the well-being of those directly affected by the issue, others associated with those people, and wider society.

You will need to support your analysis with evidence from current (in the last 5 years) research.

Supporting evidence (someone else's ideas, quotations) must be referenced.

Learner instructions

This is a resource-based assessment activity – you can use learning material that has been collected over your programme of learning.

For this assessment, the differing perspectives are the two opposing perspectives of people who support (are “for”, agree with) your chosen topic and those who oppose (are “against”, disagree with) your chosen topic. It is important that your magazine feature provides a balance of these two perspectives.

Preparation

Before you begin your feature, you will need to research the ethical issues surrounding your chosen topic, using a variety of resources (print, electronic and/or interviews).

See Resource A for a list of useful websites.

You can consult your learning leader and work with other learners during the researching phase to share information, but you must write your magazine feature, which will be assessed, individually.

Start by researching why it is an ethical issue and jot down a brief explanation to use as your foundation.

You might find it useful to log your research into the ethical issue in a two-columned chart with “for” points and “against” points, such as:

- Who holds this perspective?
- What do they believe?
- Why do they believe this?

What is current practice related to this ethical issue in New Zealand (e.g. the legal position)?

What are the implications of this perspective for people directly affected, others associated with those people, and wider society?

You will not be assessed on this research, but it will provide you with important information that you will need to complete your feature, which will be assessed.

Once you have completed your research, think about the layout of the magazine feature that you will write. Your feature could take the form of a double-page spread – where you present the two opposing perspectives and their implications on opposite pages.

You will not be assessed on the visual quality of your presentation but on the content of your analysis.

Writing your magazine feature

Your magazine feature should provide a balanced view and will:

- describe why your chosen issue is an ethical issue. (You may wish to consider points such as why it is of current public concern, why it poses ethical questions, and why it is of relevance to New Zealanders.)
- identify at least two groups of people in society who support and two groups who oppose your issue. For each group, explain the ethical foundations (attitudes, values and beliefs) that they have and why they either support or oppose. (You may wish to link these perspectives to relevant ethical principles such as the rights approach, the utilitarian approach, the fairness (justice) approach, the common good approach, or the virtue approach.)

- Explain the short-term, long-term, positive, and negative implications of current practices of euthanasia or abortion in New Zealand for the well-being of:
 - Those directly affected (e.g. personal well-being, human rights and personal safety)
 - Others associated with the people directly affected (e.g. personal well-being, relationships between other people)
 - Wider society (e.g. societal well-being, distribution of health care resources/funding, slippery slope, opportunities for health promotion, culture).

Your analysis needs to show your understanding of, and thoughtful response to, the underlying concepts of the health curriculum: hauora, attitudes and values, socio-ecological perspective, and health promotion.

You will need to consistently support your analysis with evidence from your research.

Assessment Marking Schedule 2026

Analyze a contemporary ethical issue in relation to well-being AS91464 v2 (4 cr)

Perspectives	A	M	E
Explain the differing and opposing perspectives on the issue, and the reasons for these different perspectives. At least two groups should be considered for each of the opposing perspectives (a total of four groups).
Provide a balanced view of the differing and opposing perspectives with some reference to underlying health concepts (hauora, socio ecological perspective, health promotion, attitudes and values).
Examine the perspectives on the issue with insight into the reasons for these differing perspectives and their ethical foundations. This means key groups' perspectives, links to the underpinning ethical principles and the underlying health concepts are explained. Evidence is used coherently and consistently.
Implications of the contemporary ethical issue	A	M	E
Explain the implications of current related health practices for the well-being of those directly affected by the issue, others associated with those people, and the well-being of people and society. This may include short and long-term impacts; positive and negative. The current practice is likely to be determined by laws and/or social mores, and is likely to align with one of the perspectives.		→
Key implications are discussed and links to the underlying health concepts are provided. Evidence is used coherently and consistently.
Other
A contemporary ethical issue is a health-related issue of current public concern and where there are differing perspectives held by individuals and groups of people. The nature of these different perspectives presents a dilemma for people and society (irrespective of any legal position that may determine current practice in relation to the issue).

Perspectives are the attitudes, values, and/or beliefs of individuals and groups that shape and determine the ethical issue and the nature of the debate.

At all levels, a critical perspective is needed. This means that learners might: identify and challenge taken-for-granted assumptions, explore who is advantaged and disadvantaged by aspects of the ethical issue, focus on the 'key' aspects of the issue, and/or make explicit links to the underlying concepts of the learning area.
